“Paint you with my Tears is really special, so delicate but truly a work of art. Love all the sounds; the seeming Haiku of the lyrics, and the Chinese singer is so beautiful. I was transported.”
– Lisa Hartt (Lisa Hartt Music, emgcollectives)

“Brian Morgan's ‘Curve of the Earth’ is an insightful collection of songs that draw you into a special world where east and west become one. The writing authentically tells stories of the everyday and the extraordinary embraced by lush melodies that transport you to another place.” – carolB (Ruby Slippers, CIUT89.5FM)

PRESS RELEASE VIDEO LINK

“Paint You with My Tears” is a song about the Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution in China (1966-1976). Written by Brian Morgan and produced by Peter Flood, the song includes a short excerpt from Legend of the Red Lantern, one of eight official revolutionary operas from this period. The video for the song is a rich tapestry of photo images, movie clips and propaganda posters from this historical time. A special thank you to digital media creator James Moore of Valis Video in Toronto for his many suggestions and production expertise in the making of this video. Acknowledgements go out to chineseposters.net, archive.org, Pinterest, Fairbank Center for Chinese Studies at Harvard University, Dartmouth College Library, and Our History.

Curve of the Earth is distributed by CD Baby and is streaming on Spotify, Amazon Music, YouTube, and other music services (see <https://brianmorgan.hearnow.com>). Album credits, media coverage, and Brian’s music bio are all available at <https://brianmorganmusic.ca>
